

Food Production, Culture and the Environment

Study Spanish agricultural systems, environmental sciences and culture in Granada, a picturesque city in southern Spain's Andalusia region at the foothills of the Sierra Nevada mountains. This unique program offers you the opportunity to study food production, culture and environmental sciences while experiencing southern Spain. You'll spend two weeks immersing yourself in Spanish culture, experiencing traditional Spanish food and learning about modern and traditional food production practices.

The Food Production, Culture & the Environment program gives students an overview of Spanish agriculture, firsthand experience in food production and environmental stewardship, and the opportunity for cultural immersion. Classes are taught in English and you will receive basic lessons in Spanish language and customs.

You'll discover the art of specialty cheese- and wine-making and will participate in interactive lectures and field visits, taught by experts in the fields of horticulture, viticulture, enology and animal science. Participants will visit a tropical fruit farm and local markets, as well as take a Spanish cooking class. Field trips include visits to a winery and vineyard, olive oil production facilities, cheese- and bread-making operations, Spanish ham and sausage production facilities, and the Eco Market in Granada. Cultural activities include a cathedral tour in Granada and travel to Malaga where students will tour the Picasso Museum.
